In this chapter, you take an in-depth look at the following: * Using the on-screen workspace * Uploading and downloading images * Using the Select and Marquee tools * Rasterizing and vectorizing images * Creating layers and masking * Deleting and cropping image areas * Merging layers and paths * Adding effects to your images ## Working in the Photoshop Workspace A good way to become familiar with Photoshop is to work on a copy of an image you would like to edit. (Note the word _copy_ here. There is no requirement for the image you start the Photoshop workflow with to be a final image, but the final image will end up being based on the original.) Before you load the image into Photoshop, consider how you will access your work in the future. Most graphics professionals keep a copy of their original image on a hard drive or DVD for safekeeping and later use. In the following exercise, you perform all the steps to load an image and edit it in Photoshop. You may want to follow along with the completed file (`Monet_Final.jpg`) at ` for a preview of the steps.

Q: PHP & MySQL with Ajax I currently have a database with a list of tags. The tags are displayed nicely in a list. I'd like this list to be updated when the user presses a button. I have the following PHP script: $query = "SELECT * FROM TAGS"; $result = mysqli_query($con, $query); while ($row = mysqli_fetch_array($result)){ $tags[] = $row['tags']; } mysqli_close($con); I also have an array of my database tags which is called $_POST['tags'] I've set up a listener in JavaScript which looks like this: $(".do_divide").on("click", function() { $.ajax({ type: "POST", url: "Script.php", data: "tags=" + $("#tags").val(), success: function(html) { $("#divtags").html(html); } }); }); This works nicely, it gets the tags from the database, puts them into an array, then calls to the PHP script and puts them back into the tags div. The PHP script only shows the tags in the tags div. I'd like for it to update my list. A: First, you should modify your tag table, add a rowcount column, and have a php script update the rowcount when you insert data (I'll leave that up to you to figure out). It should be easy to update the table. Your script should change to this: $query = "SELECT , COUNT() as rowcount FROM TAGS"; $result = mysqli_query($con, $query); $row = mysqli_fetch_array($result); while($row){ $tags[] = $row['tags']; } mysqli_close($con); And in your.js you should have: $(".do_divide").on("

Characteristics A Photoshop brush has four attributes: size, flow, opacity, and type. Size, a brush's overall physical size and complexity. Size has the following values: square (2 units tall by 2 units wide) square (medium) circular (50 units in diameter) circle (100 units in diameter) elliptical (50 units in width and 10 units in height) general (which may have no size stated) A brush's size tells you how large or small it will make an area of pixels in your image. Flow, a brush's shape (rectangular vs. circular vs. elliptical) and orientation (horizontal vs. vertical). Flow shows the following values: Horizontal (horizontal brush) Vertical (vertical brush) Both (brush is horizontal or vertical) Brushes can vary in complexity (small, medium or large), so each brush may have one of the following behaviors: Simple Hard Soft A simple brush has simple lines (also called straight lines) for its flow. A hard brush has hard corners and edges, and a soft brush has no corners or edges. There are three types of brush behavior: Simple, Hard, and Soft. The simple behavior is the default setting when a brush is made with a new tool. A brush with hard behavior will create a new set of brushstrokes if you sweep over an existing set of brushstrokes. A brush with soft behavior will merge and cancel brushstrokes if you sweep over existing brushstrokes. Brushes with a size of 2 square units can be painted with either the Large or Small size of a vertical brush. Opacity, how opaque or transparent the brush is. This determines how much the pixels covered by the brush are visible. Opacity values are: 100% 50% 20% 10% 5% 0% Type, determines how the brush may behave
