The Magnetic Resonance Imaging (MRI) of the breast. The past decade has witnessed a marked increase in the use of magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) for the evaluation of patients with suspected malignant breast lesions. This has been due in large part to the advent of new high-field, dedicated breast MRI systems that have resulted in increased signal-to-noise ratios, improved contrast, and increased spatial resolution. While conventional MRI has traditionally been used for evaluating the normal breast, and mammography for the evaluation of abnormal lesions, current data suggest that the two modalities perform equally well in most patients. The role of MRI in the evaluation of patients with breast disease is evolving and many centers have adopted this modality for the evaluation of breast lesions in their practice. This article provides a brief overview of MRI of the breast, discusses some of the salient clinical applications, reviews contemporary technical advances, and discusses future directions in breast MRI. Effects of acupuncture and nimodipine on the dynamic blood flow and energy metabolism of cerebral cortex and subcortex during early hypercapnia in chronic cerebral ischemic rats. Previous studies on animal models of chronic cerebral ischemia (CCI) have mainly focused on changes in the blood flow and energy metabolism of the subcortex. The purpose of this study was to evaluate the changes in the blood flow and energy metabolism of cerebral cortex and subcortex in CCI rats. Wistar rats (n = 40) were subjected to CCI by permanent occlusion of the middle cerebral artery. The animals were then randomized into sham-operated (SO) rats, CCI rats, and CCI rats treated with either acupuncture (2 mA for 30 min) or nimodipine (1 mg/kg, intraperitoneally) twice daily. At the end of the CCI or post-CCI treatment period (2 weeks), the cerebral blood flow (CBF) in the cerebral cortex and subcortex was measured with laser Doppler, blood gas analysis, and microdialysis. The CBF of the ipsilateral cerebral cortex and subcortex decreased significantly in both the SO and CCI rats; the CBF in the contralateral brain of the CCI rats was significantly lower than that of the CCI rats (P

Q: Execute an action after a certain amount of time in javascript I am trying to make a function that adds/subtracts a certain amount of time to a given date. For example, if I wanted to add "3" days to a given date, I would want it to return the datetime plus 3 days, instead of the current date with the amount of 3 added on (which is the same as removing 3 days of the current date). I tried using the Date method setHours(x) new Date().setHours(x).setMilliseconds(0) Where I setHours(3) and subtract 3 days but it appears the difference is also being taken into account when the new hour is added, so it is subtracting more than 3 days from the original date. A: This is the easiest way (even though it's not using setMinutes and setSeconds) var d = new Date(2012, 0, 1, 0, 0, 0, 0); var n = d.getTime() - 3; // 1099081328 d.setTime(n); // should give you what you want Alternatively, if you know your entire timespan, then you can use setHours, etc. var d = new Date(); var n = 3.0; // value for a day in milliseconds d.setHours(d.getHours() + n); d.setTime(n); // should give you what you want A: This should work if your timespan is small: var d = new Date(); var t = new Date(); t.setDate(d.getDate() + 3); t.setHours(d.getHours() + 3); alert(t.toLocaleString());
